

The Importance and the Relevance of the Communication and of the Comunion in the Conceptual and Interpersonal Perspective

PhD ALEXANDRU MĂLUREANU,
University of Bucharest,
alexandru.malureanu@gmail.com

Abstract

Communication is a very deep process that involves action, but also interaction, relationship and interrelationship, assuming at least three elements: communicator, message and receiver (“founding triad”).

Through communication are transmitted not only information, but also meanings.

Communication defines the human as a personal being who lives an interpersonal experience.

So the human being is ontologically structured in order to communicate for achieving the real communitarian vocation.