Abstract

This study is concerned with some of the challenges that adolescence poses in the educational process. The formation of the adult personality involves going through the crisis which is specific to this age. At the same time, the strong exercising of the teenager's will can be the starting point in finding some values which can strengthen them both personally and socially. The role of education, both of the secular and the religious one, is to meet the aspirations of the adolescent so that it can lead to the fulfillment of the religious and moral ideal.
